INFO AND HISTORY ABOUT SITE

This land had a conservation easement put on it in 2008 by the Hennens, and later was donated to the city of Woodstock to be made into a park. The Land Conservancy Office is located in the farmhouse here.

This area was a farm field in the 70s, but the Hennens bought it and started planting trees. 40 years have gone by and now the area is transitioning into a nice natural area with a good diversity of trees and other plants. A network of trails provides easy access around the park.
